City Engineer.

SATURDAY.....DEC. 19, 1885

It is not often that the DAILY HONOLULU PRESS "blows its own trumpet," but we feel a pardonable pride in calling attention to the "Grand Offer" made by us, in another column of this issue. This is an enterprise which, we believe, is the first of its kind that has ever been attempted in this Kingdom, and, we trust, will receive the patronage it deserves, as it is a bona-fide arrangement by which the public can get a six months' subscription to our paper, and a valuable Holiday Gift, at club rates, which are much less than the regular prices when not combined. This offer is open only until January 1, 1886.

PRACTICAL ELECTIONEERING.

Every vote drawn from the support of the present Administration at the coming election, is a vote secured for the cause of future good Government. The people who pay the bulk of the taxes are tired of the rule and no-policy of the present Government. It is useless to discuss abstract principles of right and justice with a corrupt Administration, which fights with the single aim of retaining itself in power. What is needed in the present campaign is practical campaign work, which will carry the war into the very camp of those who are opposed to the cause of the taxpayers. It will be futile to appeal to the honor of those in power, and beseech them to right the wrongs they have committed against the country, or to expect them to perform duties which they have persistently neglected in the past. It is the old story of those who bear the heat and burden of the day, fighting after working hours for their inalienable political rights.

Suppose that in the present political fight, the abstract principles of right and justice be set forth against the unscrupulous machinations of the Government party, which uses everything from a royal decoration to a bottle of gin to gain its ends! Suppose that the rights of taxpayers and the mal-administration of the present officials be merely set forth in the columns of English newspapers, which do not reach the native voters, or which, reaching them, they cannot read, while personal electioneering is passed by. The result will inevitably be, at least until the cumulative force of political wrong at last breaks through the barriers it has built around itself, that the will of the people will be defeated, and the mal-administration of the Kingdom will continue.

The more intelligent native voters are already becoming dissatisfied with the present administration of the Kingdom's affairs. The native newspapers which oppose the present Administration, have brought this about. The times are now ripening for the taxpayers to draw votes from the native population, not to assist the cause of the Opposition as a mere party, but to upbuild the cause of the natives and the foreign taxpayers against the common ruin which is staring the nation in the face.

The surest way to accomplish this is to turn the acts and neglect of the present Administration against those in power. Practical electioneering on the part of the taxpayers will accomplish this; if not at this election at the next. For instance, the people, both whites and natives, living on a certain street in Honolulu, have repeatedly asked that the street and sanitary condition of the neighborhood be improved. The Government has persistently neglected it. The people who live on this street, seeing no means of redress, have gone to work practically among the natives, and out of seventeen votes in the neighborhood have secured eight votes for the Opposition at the coming election. These votes are not to be cast against the King, but against his faithless Ministers. Of course it is at present useless to attempt to carry all four of the representatives for Honolulu, owing to the votes of the police force and the soldiers (who, by the way, will be mostly disbanded after election); but if the electioneering energy of the Opposition be practically expended in the outside districts of Oahu and in the other Islands, in the above practical manner, the result will be the defeat of the Government party and the advent of justice and prosperity.

CRATER LAKE.

A Wonderful Natural Curiosity in Klamath County, Or.

There can scarcely be as great a natural wonder within civilization, and at the same time so little known, close at hand, as Crater Lake. Being one of the most remarkable freaks of nature, it lies directly within our midst, and yet, I think it is safe to say the people of Oregon generally are utterly ignorant of its very existence. Situated twenty-two miles west of north of Fort Klamath, in Klamath county, directly on the summit of the Cascade Mountains, and about ninety miles east of Medford, it is easily accessible, there being a good mountain road to the very top of the walls surrounding it and fine camping grounds about half a mile distant. The lake itself is about six by eight miles in diameter, and ranges from east of north to west of south. The surface of the water is six thousand three hundred feet above sea level, and is completely surrounded by cliffs, or walls, from one thousand to nearly three thousand feet high, which are scantily covered with fir trees. To the southwest is a circular island, which our party named Wizard Island. It is six hundred feet high and in the top is a circular hole, or extinct crater, four hundred and seventy-five feet in diameter, named by us the Witch's Cauldron. The base of the island is covered with very heavy and hard rocks, over which scarcely a score of human feet have trod. Further up are deep beds of ashes and cinders, giving evidence of the most intense heat in days gone by. Within the crater, as without, the surface is entirely covered with volcanic rocks, but here it forms one of the hottest places on a clear day in August it has ever been my lot to witness. Ninety feet below the crater's rim not a breath of air can penetrate, while the sun beats down upon the rocky surface and reflects its rays from ten thousand upturned stones, forming a very furnace, and heating it beyond all endurance; nevertheless, we sat within, at the lowest point, and partook of our Monday meal with one hand, while with the other hand great drops of sweat were brushed from our brows. We took with us from Portland a light canoe, which was lowered to the lake by the aid of ropes, and by means of which we were enabled to reach Wizard Island, and see the surroundings from a point of observation seldom attained by visitors. We were also well paid for the trouble and expense, for the reason that while the view from the shore is grand beyond description, that obtained from the lake is remarkable, and inspires one with feelings of awe and awakens a depth of appreciation for the sublime unequalled.—Portland Standard.

The Four Great Moslems.

Moses, the son Amram, he who brought the children of Israel out of Egypt, who broke the chains of slavery, our great law-giver, was our first great Moslem.

Moses ben Mainman, known as Maimonides, who lived in the twelfth century, a scientific investigator, a writer of philosophic works, a student of medicine, and rich in Talmudical learning, he was our second great Moslem.

Moses Mendelssohn, born in 1729, a modern thinker, and a pursuer of the philosophy of the former, who was full of Jewish piety, and yet succeeded, to raise the social elevation of his Jewish brethren, he was our third great Moslem.

Moses Montefiore, whose death we now mourn, who was principally known for his unbounded love for all mankind, but most particularly for his unlimited philanthropy toward his co-religionists; he put into practice the teachings of his three great predecessors, and was our fourth great Moslem.—Hebrew Journal.

LADY CORRESPONDENTS.

Their Power to Penetrate Exclusive Circles of Society.

Col. Higginson, writing in the Bazar, tells of a lady who said that she should look forward with perfect satisfaction to the coming Summer, if she knew that there was not such a thing as a lady correspondent in the world, and he himself adds, reckoning up her tribulations, that she knew that, if there were a wedding in her house the most intimate details of the trousseau would be seen, and reported, or imagined and reported. Little does he, in his masculine honesty, know of the wiles of the "lady correspondent," that is to say, the "lady" who feels that she stoops in becoming a "correspondent." A woman who by virtue of her family's importance and elevation of her own character leads society in one of the principal cities of the country, tells a good story of one of these persons. "I sent her a card for the church when my daughter was married," she says, "because, as Carlyle remarked to Mallock, 'I knew her mother,' but I stopped there, determined that she should not enter my house; but just at the moment when the very cream of my guests appeared, in she walked, cool as an arctic snow, clung to my best usher's arm and forced him to show her the presents, then mercifully sent him off, took notes of gowns for a time, and then pounced on the young man of the evening, made him leave his party and take her down to supper, and then, calm as a Summer zephyr, floated up to me with: 'Good evening. It has been a beautiful wedding, and I'm so much obliged to you for an opportunity to see everything.' Lady! Why my laundress would not behave so! I would rather starve with Helen Harkness than succeed like that woman. And she spoke of my 'distinguished courtesy' in her letter. How I longed to be without it for two minutes, to talk to her, and do justice to her!"

Anecdote of Andrew Johnson.

"Just preceding the war," said a Tennessee man, "Andrew Johnson had many enemies in Tennessee, and once when he was billed for an evening speech at Nashville, the report was spread that if he dared to speak he would be either mobbed or egged, and perhaps assassinated. When the hour for assembling came the house was already thronged and Andy Johnson was on the platform. He promptly arose, and going to the front took a pistol from his pocket and cocked it. He then opened the meeting by saying: 'Gentlemen and fellow-citizens: It is meet that when free men assembled for discussion of important business interests everything should be done decently and in order. Now, I have been informed that a part of the proceedings on the present occasion is the assassination of the individual addressing you.'

"Here he grasped the pistol firmly with his right hand, threw open his coat with his left, and continued: 'I propose that this little matter be the first business taken up. If any man comes here to-night for that purpose let him not speak, but shoot.' "At this there was a pause, and no one replied. 'Ah,' said Mr. Johnson, 'I see I have been misinformed. I will proceed with the meeting.' "And there was not a ripple of dissent in the hall that night. Johnson was applauded at every period, and he had not an enemy present who dared to groan above his breath."—Cleveland Leader.

Astec Relics.

Jacob Z. Davis has enriched the State Mining Bureau with gifts of models of the Aztec calendar stone, the sacrificial stone, and some genuine obsidian knives, which were once actually used by priests in taking the hearts from the bodies of those sacrificed. The models are made in plaster, and colored to resemble the black basalt of which the originals are made. The calendar stone at Mexico is seven feet in diameter. The face is a facsimile of the mystic symbols or signs by which periods of time were marked by the Aztecs, and the sides are elaborately carved. The stone is circular, on a square base, in which are cut lines and figures, which doubtless had an important meaning. The sacrificial stone possesses a more melancholy interest. The original is thirteen feet across its face, which is filled with concentric channels cut in circles around the central bowl. From this bowl a channel is cut straight across to the edge of the stone, intersecting the circular channels and gradually widening toward the outer edge, to accommodate and carry off the blood that flowed from the human sacrifices.—Alta California.

Weakness of Great Men.

Alexander was too fond of strong drink.

Julius Caesar was inordinately vain and fond of dress.

Demosthenes was always on the platform when everything was serene, and under it when there was danger.

Peter the Great was a glutton and a drunkard.

Napoleon was addicted to lying; so much so that the habit became notorious.

Sheridan was never able to give up the bottle and the gaming table.

George Washington occasionally swore when he was very mad.

Disraeli started out a dandy and remained one to the last.

General Santa Ana had a weakness for cock-fighting.

David Kalakaua ate poi while foreigners ruled his Kingdom.
